Correspondence. Partido de Chascomus. Sep. 10, 1861. To the Editor of the Weekly Standard.

In answer to the question "What class of rams is most profitable to the general sheep breeder?" the concurrence of some very experienced sheep farmers, I beg to say: that as it is a question of exceeding importance to us all, to foster right ideas, and eradicate illusions, as many of the intelligent sheep farmers of the country as can spare time to answer this question, ought to do so. It cannot be denied but that the intelligent native gentlemen engaged in the sheep farming business are now during these latter years more particular in having good, first class rams in their mezzos flocks than even our own countrymen; this will seem a strange fact at first sight, but if any of your readers doubt it they can verify the statement by applying to any of the principal rams establishments in the country. Taking this therefore as a fact, we must inquire from whence this phenomenon arises, simply, it may be answered, that as the general sheep breeder thinks it neither answers his means nor his circumstances to invest large sums in putting mezzos flocks, he is contented to hold on to the old rams he has got and every year make them as good as new by changing these old rams from one flock to another. During a short sojourn to the north some little time since, I had good opportunity for taking some notes on this important subject. Now in the first place our countrymen seem to prefer the older mired breed of rams which came from Hérzrate & Sherridans, to either the new class of Negrete or Rambouillet, for many reasons such as soundness of hoof, rotundity of body, shortness of legs, belly well covered &c. and to the wool, it cannot be denied but that if the Rambouillet give more wool it is coarser, the negrete breed is of any thing too fine & the animal small, they require also great care & should be housed in winter. I should like to know the opinion of one who knows as to whether the mestiza Rambouillet does not make a better cross with a good mestiza sheep than the negrete; as I said before, some of my neighbours concern with me on this point, the mestiza negrete Rambouillet are not in our opinion so desirable for the general sheep breeder as the mestiza merino Rambouillet Yours, an Irish sheep farmer.

MISCELLANEOUS. THE VALLEZARRES OF AUSTRIA.—Twenty years ago Austria was as far as anything in the way of maritime development went, absolutely null. She had one steamer, the Archduke Ludwig, belonging to what was called the "Austrian Lloyd," which establishment the said steamer, in fact, represented. At the present moment this same "Austrian Lloyd" possesses sixty of the finest steamers that are anywhere to be found, has the first prizes awarded in the world, and employs for many thousands of men, and has, in a quarter of a century, been the prime motive power, as it may be termed, of millions of money. The development of the Austrian navy has been more rapid even than that of the "Lloyd." In 1848 the whole of her fleet consisted of three sailing frigates, five corvettes, eight brigs, and three aviso-steamboats. Her fleet at this moment consists of one screw steamship of the line, three screw steam-frigates, four sailing frigates, two screw and four sailing corvettes, three brigs, fifteen paddle steamers, twenty-one screw gunboats, twelve cable-steamers, nine iron-plated floating batteries of sixteen 45-pounders, four schooners, and two iron plated frigates, about to be launched in a few weeks. Every man in the empire speaks with pride of the screw steamship of the line, the "Kaiser," in the building of which not a foreign hand or one atom of foreign machinery was employed. From the engines and the guns up to the stem-post of her rigging, everything was purely Austrian in this noble vessel. It may be worth while to remark that the Piedmontese have all along been relying for their ship-building timber upon Austrian exports, and at this hour the Austrians have, in all our inalienable quantities, the Austrian shores. Not only has the manufacturing skill of the empire been developed, with inferior rapidly or inferior results. For the last sixteen or eighteen years there has existed in Trieste a large and well-known manufactory of steam-engines under the direction of M. Strudhoff. In the beginning Austrian engineers would hear of nothing save engines and machinery of English manufacture. Not quite ten years back they agreed, nevertheless, to allow a trial to be made, and an engine of 100 horses power was ordered in M. Strudhoff's establishments for the paddle-wheel steamer Taurus. The success was complete, and the Admiralty authorities forthwith changed their opinion, and began to employ their native manufactory, the operations of which have become so extensive that it has become one of the steam-works which have been enumerated above as supplied by engines produced by M. Strudhoff's firm; and it is highly satisfied in the Admiralty with their performance that, in spite of its former prejudices, it has lately, in a document addressed to the Commission, in question, expressed its deliberate opinion that the engines furnished by it "viend a triomphe." The Commission, in question, expressed its deliberate opinion that the engines furnished by it "viend a triomphe."
